THE MOTHER-IN-LAW.

A good many things, some of them good, many sharp and occasionally cruel, having been said of mother-in-laws, now comes one of that much-talked of class and tella her side of the story. That she tells it well will be admitted by all who read it.

"Lelt a widow, after a few years of most unhappy married life, I retired, with my two children, to a small town where I intended to subsist upon my very moderate means and to devote mysell to the care of their education. care of their education.

I think the enjoyment we have in our children before they reach the age of ten is very great. All sults and evil tendencies seem so sure to be eradicated withtime, we can scarcely believe the pains we are taking will ever have any but the desired result. Those early promises are so beautiful. Every childsh liking seems a talent, lacking only confortuity to dea talent, lacking only opportunity to de-

Then our teable and our warming walks. -how delightful was our companthem—now designtful was our companionship. How I tried every way to sow the good seed. I have said that my means were small, but my wants were few, and I considered it my duty to make them fewer for my children's sake. I took care that they were all well dressed, often working late at night upon their clothes; my own were this neough. They never my own were plain enough. They never knew, of course, the sacrifice I made that knew, of course, the sacrifice I made that they might have pleasure.

That my children loved me, I need not repeat. Their first thought always seemtobe of me. At Christmas they presented me with horrid little daubs, which I still treasure, tied up in packages and dated. Ah! happy days. Days when a paper of sweet cake is sufficient for happiness.

and less dependent on me. James left school and as my means did not admit of his going to college, I obtained admittance for him into the place of business of a friend. One day I heard an acquaintance say that my son admired a Miss Benson. Then first shot into my heart that acute pang of jealousy which I had heard a woman feels when snother woman darea to man feels when another woman dares to ay claim to her son—a bitter, unreasonalay claim to her som—a bitter, unreasonable feeling, but strong and fierce, tramble on it as you may. I asked James about it; he laughed at the very idea.

A year atterward he announced that he was engaged to this very girl, and asked me to go and see her. I went. She was tall and very thin and stylish looking, with reddish hair. She wore a great many flounces and a great deal of jewelry of the pale gold kind. Her manners were yreactious to me, but somehow or other manners were yreactious to me, but somehow or other manners were the pale gold kind. of the pale gold kind. Her manners were very gracious to me, but somehow or oth-er there was something about her that seemed to say she was the one who al-ways had a right to James, while I stood out in the queer and awkward light of one whose claims upon him were very one whose claims upon him were very trifling and quite recent.

When I went home I sat in my rocking chair for about an hour, thinking. I had understood the formation of every kite he had ever flown, fathomed the capacities of every toy cannon with which he had ever just missed committing suicide, overcome the mysteries of marbles.

friend and entrusting my house and all it contained to the care of one servant, I left home alone. Arriving after dark at my destination, I found the two young servants enjoying a very comfortable meal in the kitchen and the baby asleep meal in the kitchen and the baby saleep alone in a chilly nursery. My son and wife were out spending the evening with some friends. Their surprise and pleasure at seeing me on their return home appeared great. Upon conversing with Maris the next day, I found her to be very ignorant as regarded baby's requirements. "He does cry so dreadfully," she said. I stayed there a month; perhaps it was too long, but there always seemed to said. I stayed there a month; perhaps it was too long, but there always seemed to be something for me to do. I took charge of the little creature whenever his mother wanted to spend an evenling in company, which was not seldom. Many and many a lonely hour did I spend in that dimly lighted room listening to that low breathing, rather than trust him to the awkwardness of the young girl who professed to fulfil the duties of a child's nurse. I did a great deal of sewing for Maria, of whom I became fonder than I had ever expected to be.

fail him now. I sat up with him night after night, and showed the cook how to prepare nice dishes for him, such as I knew he liked—that is to say, I prepared them while the cook looked on. Whatever was wanted up stairs or down, I was the one to plan and to do. At last I began to think I ought to return to Fanny, and seeing James fairly convalescent, I sought the train for my journey homeward. Sitting in the railroad car, a party of young people took places in front of me, laughling and talking with eager animation, principally about persons I knew nothing of, except by name. Presently to one of them began to talk about my son's wife.

"I used to see a great deal of them at one time," she said, "but—"

"But what?" asked another.

"Oh! well, they had a mother-in-law raging around lately, so I have kept away." "So have I."

Here followed a laugh of derision "A mother in law!" exclaimed another;
"that is hard; I do plty them, indeed."
"But I hear she is off now."
"Glad to hear it. Have you heard the

I was the mother-in-law on whose ac I was the mother-in-law on whose account friends kept away. I remembered the weary nights in that sick room; the weary days when, suffering from the loss of sleep, I struggled to keep my eyes open, that I might attend to the various little household duties. All this was the "raging around" which excited the risable muscles of those lively young people. Lithought of Fanny, her good looks, her intelligence, her affectionate nature, and stelligence, her affectionate nature, and intelligence, her allectionate nature, and found myself wondering what her inture was to be. But here weare. There she was waiting to meet me, dear child; but there was some one with her, a most insignificant looking individual, with very prominent eyes and large whiskers. Why did my heart sink with meiancholy and foreboding.

How giad she was to see me again. How giad she was to see me again. She introduced her companion to me as Mr. Jenkins; and whereas I was all anxiety to be alone with her, Mr. Jenkins, with a great flourish of politeness, walked all the way home with us. Before I could untie the strings of my bonnet, he told me that Fanny had promised to marry him. I was thunder-struck, having, in annoyance of his presence, forgotten my forbodings of half an hour before. I had read with much attention, in various highly lauded books, of the great and imperative lauded books, of the great and imperative duty of bringing up a girl to be a help-meet for a noble man—this dapper little manskin! He seemed amlable, but so ut-terly insignificant. He had uninteresting parents, and weak, plain sisters, all of parents, and weak, plain sisters, all of whom made a perpetual amusement of the engagement. My parlor was given up to them entirely—that is to him and his sisters. I seemed always de_trop when I entered, judging by the sudden silence which followed the animated talk. My coming was an interruption. I began to sit up stairs. I always walked alone. Having avoided all society and all acquaintanceship when my children were young, that I might devotemy whole time to them, I found myself now friendless and desolate. Friends, like plants, must be cultivated. I found no congeniality in either of the two families with which my children were connecting themselves. After two years they were married; and After two years they were married; and after a year of boarding aspired to the dignity of keeping house. After looking at many dwellings one was selected, one which required a great many repairs, and now my services were in very great request. I attended to all the directions Mr. Jenkins wished given to the workmen; I stayed in the cold empty rooms all day when there was nothing to sit on but day, when there was nothing to sit on but an empty candle box. I did the necessary an empty candle for. I dot the necessary quarrelling with the plumbers, and bore the snubbing of the upholsters; and Lput the furniture in the places I thought best, by degrees changing it all to suit his tastes. I washed all the chins and glass; and sometimes fancied, when I got dirty doing all this, that I was happy. I had so long here accustomed to work for those so long been accustomed to work for those I loved that it was hard to learn that there might be any repreach connected with it. I must do Fanny the justice to say that she was very kind and grateful to me

On the last day, after having some cold tea out of a pitcher on the corner of a mantlepiece, I overheard Mr. Jenkins, who had brought a friend in to admire tary little house to myself, and very soil-tary it was. I tried to get up some spas-modic friendship with my neighbors, but being hollow, these forced intimacies soon fell through. But I oughtn't to complain; it is the way of the world.

I only wonder if considering the love we have for our children, young or old, the world is not apt to be a little hard upon the mother-in-law.

The Phenomena of Sleep.

Dr. Egbert Gurnsey, in the June number of the Medical Union, thus discourses he had ever just missed committing autodic, overcome the mysteries of marbles of every degree, loved every puppy and kitten he had ever adopted and taken to his heart—why could I not at least try to love this; reddish—haired girl? People congratulated. "Oh! yes, I was very much pleased, not losing a son at all—oh, no—only gaining another daughter." "Delightful, certainly, and early marriages are, as you say, so very desirable." A year atterward they were married and remained some months with her family, during which time I saw her often, and cannot say that I ever had any fault to find with her. Then James sought and obtained a very good position in a town distant about one hundred miles. At first the news was very eatisfactory. "Oharming little house, the perfection of servants;" then later, "the lovellest little baby," my grandson. Then some months ater, things were not quite so bright. The baby had the croup, my, son himself had a touch of the intermittent lever, servants were great plagues, housekeeping a dreadful trouble. Disturbed beyond measure by the reiteration of these lamentations, I decided to go and see for myself how they were circumstanced, and be of what assistance I might for a short time. So one winter morning, leaving Fanny with an intimate friend and entrusting my house and all it contained to the care of one servant, I cont of sleep, from a phylcian's point of view.

"Sleep is a positive necessity. It is a period of recuperation, during which there is a restoration of what has suffered collapse, waste or disturbance during the period of waking activity. The tired brain and the acting muscles regain, by rest, strength and power to obey the mandates of the will. The demands of the material form for rest are so great as often a terval between the preliminary torture and the lighting of the fire, has sweetly slumbered, and been only arroused by the flame which was to consume him curling around him."

MARTIN'S FERRY.

Editors of the Intelligencer:

A Bridgeporter interests himself to find out if Silk. Stockings is himself. I am satisfied that B. P. cannot tell the difference between a Blackhawk and Hambletonian horse, and I care not of which stock Silk Stockings comes, so long as he can do the work.

Nobody claims that he is a colt of the cold Chas. Kent mare. She has been dead seven years, while Bilk Stockings is only four years old.

Mr. Palmer could fill a column of a newspaper with the history of the horse, where he was born and raised, and how he got to Martin's Ferry, if he was a mind to. The fact, however, remains that Silk Stockings is a Hambletonian Editors of the Intelligencer:

James had a relapse of his intermittent fever. His wife knew nothing about siekness: I nursed him—I who had never known fatigue when he had needed anything in former years, would surely not that is required.

Our Moundsville Correspondence

Trip to West Libertys-The Hill City Brightening Ups-Rospitality of its Citizens. MOUNDSVILLE, June 15.

We had the pleasure last Saturday of visiting West Liberty, after an absence of nearly a year, and it will not be necessary for me to tell that I enjoyed the visit. A stranger visiting the little city on the hill is always so charmed with the hosipitality of the good people who live there that he wishes to go again. How there tality of the good people who live there that he wishes to go again. How, then, could one fail to enjoy a visit there, who for more than three years enjoyed that hospitality. We left Moucdaville on Friday evening, on the 10 o'clock train, and in a very short time were in Wheeling enjoying the splendid accommodations of the Stamm House, which, by the way, we consider one of the best hotels in the State. At 7.4 x 8 shrugsy we took pass. State. At 7 a. M. Saturday we took pass-age on the raging Hempfield, and in the short time of one hour and a half we were on the platform of the West Alex-ander depot, where a codveyance for three was in waiting from the linear stathree was in waiting from the livery sta-ble of our old friend Peter Hoye, which soon conveyed us to our destination. The ride across the grand old hills of Ohio county was delightful, and was accom-plished in so short a time that by 10 A. M. we were once more within the limits of the ancient town of West Liberty.

We noticed many improvements dur-og the past year. First and foremost, ing the past year. First and foremost, the Presbyterian Church is a building that is scarcely surpassed by any of our city churches. It is an honor to the community and speaks volumes in favor of the con-munity and speaks volumes in favor of the congregation who built it. An iron fence is erected in front, and when the surroundings are decorated as they will be, it will be beautiful. Henry Speare has erected a new dwelling house near by the church, which is very tasteful and adds much to the appearance of the

A PROBABLE BENEDIOT.

Our batchelor friend Dr. Hukill has also improved his property, which looks as though the doctor contemplated committing the crime of matrimony. John Gardner's residence looks very well after mitting the crime of matrimony. John Gardner's residence looks very well after the improvements he has put on it. We found the merchants about as they were a year ago, with the exception that A. M. Ridgely has taken a sleeping partner to share his joys and sorrows through life, has well as the profits of his business.

A new hotel is in operation, viz: Lib-erty House, Col. W. B. Curtis. We know whereof we speak when we affirm that the wants of all who may call there will be well supplied. The Irwin House is still cone for guests, and all know the hossupplied. The fiving flower is standard or open for guests, and all know the hospitality of the proprietor. We had the pleasure in the afternoon of attending the pleasare in the alternoon of attending the annual school picnic, which was a real coloyable affair, at least to the young la-dies and gentlemen, who made good use of their time in singing, playing copenhagen, &c. We saw many of our old friends and pupils, and enjoyed it all just as well as we could possibly do. After a long and pleasant talk with Pro-fessors Morrow and Kyle, and walking all around the old town, I went to the country to spend the night.
